

Harvard Referencing Guide

UniSA

This guide will help you apply the Harvard referencing style to your writing at UniSA. It is designed to help you understand the conventions and principles of this style and make decisions about referencing. There are many different versions of the Harvard style. This guide presents one consistent version for use at UniSA, which conforms to the Australian Government standard guidelines presented in Snooks & Co (eds) 2002, Style manual for authors, editors and printers, 6th edn, Wiley & Sons, Australia.

What is referencing?

Whenever you write an assignment at university, you will probably be expected to use information from different sources to support and develop your thinking. Referencing is a standard practice used in academic writing to show your reader which ideas you have gathered from other sources and where those ideas came from.

Why do we reference?

It is important to show your reader that you have sought out expert, reliable sources to help support and develop your thinking, and this is done through referencing. The referencing in your assignment:

- demonstrates good research conduct
- shows the range of ideas and approaches you have found and thought about
- acknowledges the sources of those ideas
- tells your reader where they can locate those sources.

Referencing also helps you to avoid plagiarism. If you present someone else's ideas as if they are your own work, or use the exact same language they use without acknowledgment, you are committing plagiarism. Plagiarism can be unintentional due to poor referencing, but the consequences are always serious. Accurate referencing helps you to avoid this. For more information on avoiding plagiarism, visit <http://www.unisa.edu.au/Referencing>

When do we reference?

Every time you include words, ideas or information from a source – whether it's a website, book or journal article – in your assignment, you must include an in-text reference to show that this content has been gathered from somewhere else. In-text references must be included whenever you:

- paraphrase someone else's ideas in your own words
- summarise someone else's ideas in your own words
- quote someone else's ideas in their exact words
- copy or adapt a diagram, table or any other visual material.

For each source that you reference in-text, you must also create an entry in the reference list at the end of the assignment.

How do we reference?

There are two components to a Harvard reference:

- 1) an in-text reference in the body of your assignment

Chabon (2008) explores a range of themes and ideas...

- 2) full reference details in your reference list

Chabon, M 2008, Maps and legends, McSweeney's Books, San Francisco.

1) In-text references

An in-text reference is provided each time you refer to ideas or information from another source, and includes the following details:

- the author's family name (do not include given names)/authoring body or organisation
- the year of publication
- page numbers where applicable.

There are two main ways to present an in-text reference, as shown below. One way gives prominence to the information by placing the reference at the end of your sentence in brackets:

Universities can play an active role in finding solutions for climate change (Filho 2010, p. 2).

Another way gives prominence to the author by placing the reference in the body of your sentence, with the author's name incorporated into the sentence structure and the date in brackets:

Filho (2010, p. 2) argues that universities can play an active role in finding solutions for climate change.

Page numbers are included when you:

- quote part of a source word for word
- summarise or paraphrase an idea from a specific page or pages
- refer to tables, figures, images or present specific information like dates/statistics.

Habel (2007, p. 48) notes that the novelist 'draws on an established tradition of appropriating the wayang for various social and political purposes'.

If you do these things for a source without pages – e.g. a website – then just author and year will suffice.

2) The reference list

The reference list provides full bibliographic details for all the sources referred to in your assignment so that readers can easily locate them. Each different source referenced in your essay must have a matching entry in your reference list.

It is important to note that the reference list is not a bibliography. A bibliography lists everything you may have read, while a reference list is deliberately limited to those sources for which you have provided in-text references. A bibliography is not needed unless specifically requested by your lecturer.

The reference list is titled References and is:

- arranged alphabetically by author's family name (or title/sponsoring organisation where a source has no author)
- a single list where books, journal articles and electronic sources are listed together (see sample reference list on p. 6 of this guide).

The main elements required for all references are the author, year, title and publication information.

The diagram illustrates the formatting of a reference list. It features a central box containing three reference entries. Three callout boxes point to specific formatting elements: 'Single line spacing required' points to the first entry; 'Leave space between each entry' points to the blank line between the first and second entries; and 'No indentation required in second or subsequent lines of an entry' points to the second and third entries.

Single line spacing required

Judd, D, Sitzman, K & Davi, GM 2010, A history of American nursing: trends and eras, Jones and Bartlett, London.

Leave space between each entry

Sandler, MP, Patton, JA, Coleman, RE, Gottschalk, A, Wackers, FJ & Hoffere, PB 1999, Diagnostic nuclear medicine, Williams & Wilkins, Baltimore.

Whittemore, R 2009, 'How can nursing intervention research reduce the research-practice gap?', Canadian Journal of Nursing Research, vol. 41, no. 4, pp. 7–15.

No indentation required in second or subsequent lines of an entry

An extract from an essay using the Harvard referencing system

Essay extract

... The literal adaptation of a book to film is practically impossible. As Stam (2005a, p. 4) suggests:

The shift from a single-track verbal medium such as the novel to a multi-track medium like film, which can play not only with words (written and spoken) but also with music, sound effects, and moving photographic images, explains the unlikelihood and ... undesirability of literal fidelity.

It is puzzling, then, that readers and audiences are so critical of adaptations which take liberties, sometimes for the better, with their source material.

Film adaptations of novels are frequently 'castigated and held to an absurdly rigorous standard of fidelity' (Stam 2005b, p. 15). If key scenes from a novel are pruned for film, audiences often react negatively. However, fidelity is not an appropriate measure for evaluating a film adaptation's success, as numerous scholars concur (Desmond & Hawkes 2006; Leitch 2008; McFarlane 1996; Miller & Stam 2004). Judging film adaptations is ultimately, Whelehan (1999, p. 9) contends, 'an inexact science dogged by value judgments about the relative artistic worth of literature and film'. A fan of a novel might denigrate a film adaptation which alters the original book in some fashion, but their response is highly subjective and fails to take into account the practices and realities of film production (McFarlane 2007, p. 26).

Sometimes there are grounds for hostility. Author Alan Moore has witnessed a number of his complex graphic novels adapted into shallow Hollywood products, making him extremely critical of filmmakers and the filmmaking process (Ashurst 2009). However, this kind of attitude can be knee-jerk and reactionary. Rather than being overly pedantic about textual faithfulness, it is best to approach film adaptations as re-interpretations of their source material (Hutcheon 2006, p. 8) or as 'a permutation of text, an intertextuality' (Kristeva, cited in Sanders 2006, p. 2). Moreover, new modes of production further complicate existing definitions of, and approaches to, adaptation (Moore, MR 2010, p. 180). So ...

Comments

Always provide author, year and page number(s) when quoting.

Quotes longer than thirty words are indented both sides, and are one font size smaller. Ellipsis (...) shows one or more words have been omitted.

The letters 'a' and 'b' have been added to the years here and above to distinguish between different sources by the same author (Stam) published in the same year.

Several sources cited at once.

Quotes shorter than thirty words are enclosed in single quotation marks.

Always provide author, year and page number(s) when paraphrasing a printed source.

Internet documents require the same information for the in-text reference (author and year). No page number for electronic sources unless available.

Quote from Kristeva found in Sanders' work.

If authors have similar surnames, include first initials in reference to avoid confusion.

Frequently asked questions

1. How do I reference information from one author (Author 1) which I have found in a book or journal article by another author (Author 2)?

Sometimes you will need to refer to authors whose work you encounter secondhand (i.e. mentioned in other people's work). You should mention both authors (Author 1 and Author 2) in your in-text reference, but only list the actual item you read (Author 2) in your reference list.

For example, if you read an idea by Bate (Author 1) in a source by McInnis (Author 2) you would need to mention both authors in your in-text reference.

Bate (cited in McInnis 2010, p. 13) states that...

...is more important (Bate, cited in McInnis 2010, p. 13).

However, in the reference list you should only list McInnis (Author 2, the source you read) and not Bate (whose idea you read about in McInnis).

2. How do I present exact quotations?

Short quotations of fewer than thirty words should be enclosed in single quotation marks ('...') and be accompanied by an in-text reference including a page number where possible. If you are referencing an online source without page numbers, just author and year will suffice.

Research indicates that 'over a thousand autobiographies of childhood have been published in roughly the past fifteen years' (Douglas 2010, p. 1).

Quotations of more than thirty words should be presented without quotation marks and indented on both sides. A font one size smaller should be used.

According to Barnett (2009, p. 219):

While some authors respond to the rise of technologies in the lives of humans by articulating anxieties through figures such as the mad scientist, or tropes such as the destruction of civilisation, others see in technology a promise ... of new and exciting ways of being and expressing the human in the face of co-evolution with technology.

The three dots after the word 'promise' (called an ellipsis) show that a word or words have been left out. Always introduce or transition into quotations using your own words to maintain the flow of your writing. If you quote another source directly without adding quotation marks (for short quotes) or indenting it as a block quote (for long quotes), this may be identified as plagiarism.

3. Where exactly do I put the full stop when quoting and/or referencing?

Full stops must always be placed at the very end of a sentence, after the quotation and/or in-text reference.

Research indicates that 'over a thousand autobiographies of childhood have been published in roughly the past fifteen years' (Douglas 2010, p. 1).

According to Barnett (2009, p. 219), several authors see technology as providing 'new and exciting ways of being and expressing the human in the face of co-evolution with technology'.

4. How do I refer to one or more pages in my in-text reference?

To refer to a single page, simply use p. followed by a space and the page number.

Pryce (2018, p. 9) claims this result to be significant.

When referring to consecutive pages, use pp. followed by a space and the page range.

... analyses these findings (Smith 2017, pp. 30-42).

Pryce (2018, pp. 16-8) compares these theories.

Refer to non-consecutive pages as below:

Pryce (2018, pp. 9, 21, 23) claims this result to be significant.

5. Can I reference two or more sources at the same time?

Yes. Use a semi-colon to separate the items in the in-text reference, and list the items alphabetically according to their authors' family names.

Social networking has had a major impact on young people (Body & Ellison 2007; Hansford & Adlington 2009; Lenhart & Madden 2007).

If referencing multiple sources by the same author, present the items in chronological order (oldest to most recent) and separate them with commas.

Buzan (2005, 2006, 2007) is a mind-mapping expert and enthusiast.

6. How do I reference two or three authors?

When there are two or three authors for a reference, include all their family names in the in-text reference, in the same order that they are listed in the original source. Use the word 'and' to separate surnames in the body of your sentence, and '&' to do so in brackets.

Wahlstrom and Quirchmayr (2008) advocate for this system.

According to Campbell, Fox and de Zwart (2010, p. 11), students should tread carefully when using internet resources.

Students should tread carefully when using internet resources (Campbell, Fox & de Zwart 2010, p. 11).

7. How do I reference more than three authors?

If there are four or more authors, you should only use the first author's family name in the in-text reference followed by the term 'et al.' (a Latin abbreviation for 'and others'). This is done from the first use of the in-text reference.

This is observed by Solomon et al. (2008) in their climate change study.

All the authors' names must be included in your reference list, in the same order that they are listed in the original source. However, if there are more than 7 authors, list the first 6 in your reference list, followed by an ellipsis (...) and then the name of the last author.

8. How do I reference when there is no author and/or no year?

When no person is mentioned, include the title of the source or the authoring/sponsoring organisation in place of the author.

In-text reference:

... viable options (Department of Immigration and Citizenship 2012).

Reference list:

Department of Immigration and Citizenship 2012, Permanent visa options for doctors, Department of Immigration and Citizenship, Australian Government, viewed 6 November 2012, <<http://www.immi.gov.au/skilled/medical-practitioners/permanent-visas.htm>>.

When no year of publication is given, use the abbreviation n.d. which stands for 'no date' in place of a year, or give an approximate year preceded by a c. which stands for 'circa'. However, be wary of using sources without years as it is harder to verify whether the information is relevant or outdated.

In-text reference:

This is emphasized by Seah (n.d.) when...

Reference list:

Seah, R n.d., Micro-computer applications, Microsoft Press, Redmond, Washington.

9. How do I identify the family name of an author?

The custom in English speaking cultures is to present the given name(s) first and the family name last. This can be seen with the name Michael Keith Jackson.

First given name Michael	Second given name Keith	Family name Jackson
-----------------------------	----------------------------	------------------------

For a source written in 2017, this author's name would be entered in:

- the in-text reference as: (Jackson 2017)
- the reference list as: Jackson, MK 2017

Note: the two given names (Michael and Keith) are reduced to the first initial of each name in the reference list and are placed together without punctuation.

Sometimes the order of names is reversed such as in library catalogues and databases. When the order is reversed this is shown by a comma placed after the family name as with:

Anderson, Mary Louise Chen, Youhua Shah, Prakesh S	(Anderson 2017) (Chen 2013) (Shah 2017)

10. What if there are two authors with the same family name?

Occasionally you will need to reference two different authors who share the same family name. To avoid ambiguity, include the authors' first initials after their family names in the in-text references.

Shakespeare's play 'uses the technique of externalisation to anatomise an inner emotional struggle' (Smith, E 2007, p. 17).

Lacan's work grounds 'personal identity and its discontents in language' (Smith, B 2010, p. 6).

11. How do I reference family names with a prefix?

Family names containing prefixes such as de, van, von or De, Van, Von should be listed in the reference list under D and V respectively. Thus if the author's name is Melissa de Zwart, her name would appear in the reference list under 'd' not 'Z'. Also keep the prefix as part of the surname in-text.

In-text reference:

de Zwart (2009) notes...

Reference list:

de Zwart, M 2009, 'Piracy vs. control: models...

12. How do I reference a name with a suffix?

If a name contains a generational suffix such as Junior, do not include the suffix in-text but identify it in your reference list.

In-text reference:

...depiction of war (Vonnegut 1966).

Reference list:

Vonnegut, K Jr 1966, Mother night...

Similarly, names containing generational suffixes such as II, III, or IV should be referenced as above.

In-text reference:

...ethical considerations (Smith 2012).

Reference list:

Smith, GP II 2012, Law and bioethics: along the mortal coil...

13. How do I reference hyphenated names?

If an author's family name is hyphenated, include the hyphen in your referencing.

In-text reference:

...economic considerations (Pitt-Watson 1991).

Reference list:

Pitt-Watson, D 1991, Economic short termism...

If the given name is hyphenated, include the hyphen in your reference list.

In-text reference:

...existential considerations (Sartre 1944).

Reference list:

Sartre, J-P 1944, No exit...

14. How do I reference multiple sources by the same author published in the same year?

If an author has published more than one item in the same year, place a lower case letter of the alphabet next to the dates in your in-text referencing to distinguish between these separate publications.

Stam argues this point eloquently (2005a) and reiterates it elsewhere (2005b).

You must also include these lower case letters in your reference list entries as well. The order in which you attach the letters should follow the alphabetical order of the titles of these sources.

15. Can I paste the URL of a webpage into my essay as an in-text reference?

No. Harvard is an 'author-date' system. Follow the author-date in-text referencing conventions for all sources. If you are unsure how to reference a website because there is no author or year provided, follow the guidelines provided above for referencing sources without authors or years (FAQ 3).

16. How do I locate the URL on a pdf?

To identify the URL for a pdf, right click on the link to the pdf document, click Copy shortcut and then paste to the appropriate position in your Reference list entry. If there is no URL for the pdf, then use the URL of the site where the document was found.

17. How do I decide on the publication date for books?

With books available in a variety of formats, it is not always straightforward to identify a publication date. There may be more than one year listed. Use the date listed on the copyright page next to the copyright symbol ©. Ignore dates for reprints, reissues and impressions – these do not involve substantial changes to a book's content. The book itself is the most reliable source for the year.

18. How do I reference a reprint of a book?

In the case of a reprint of a book, use the year of publication, not the year of the reprint. This is because reprint means the content has not changed so the same edition is being used. However, if the book is revised or a new edition is published, then the year of the revision/edition is used as the content has changed in some way.

19. How do I reference an extract of a book?

If the book extract is published in an edited book then you can follow the same format for referencing a 'Chapter in an edited book'. If you are viewing an extract on a bookseller's website, where you are able to view an excerpt from the book, then you can follow the format for referencing the book itself including the usual information about author, date, title, publisher and place of publication.

20. Can I copy an image from any source and use it in my assignment?

Permission is not required to include images (such as photographs, illustrations, graphs, figures and tables) in work you submit for assessment purposes. However, the image must be referenced both in-text and in the reference list following the standard format.

However if your work will be made available outside the UniSA community, (such as posting on a public website, or artwork that may be publicly exhibited or sold), then you will need to seek permission. Further guidance can be found by searching for 'copyright' on the UniSA website.

What if your source does not exactly match any of the previous examples?

While this guide has provided a wide range of examples, it is not possible to provide a model for every type of source you might use in your assignments. If you have not been able to find an exact match for the type of source you need to reference, find examples for similar sources and combine the elements to create the reference you need. For instance, the reference below is for a chapter in an edited document which was found online in PDF form. It has been created through combining aspects of the following types of references:

- a chapter in an edited book
- an online document in PDF form.

If you cannot find comparable reference types, always identify the following components of the source, and arrange them in the order below:

- author, editor, or authoring body/organisation
- year of publication
- title
- publication information.

Bibliographic management software

Bibliographic management software, such as EndNote, enables you to establish and store your own database of references and insert them into your assignments using various styles. Further information about available software can be found by following the 'Managing References' link on the UniSA Library homepage.

When using referencing software it is essential to check that the in-text references and the reference list produced accurately reflect Harvard UniSA referencing style.
